

Learn more at educaloi.qc.ca:

- Your Right to Control Photos and Videos of Yourself
- cyberbullying
- Sexual crimes

To order print documents, visit the Order Éducaloi's Publications section of our website.

Éducaloï.qc.ca has hundreds of articles on legal topics touching the daily lives of Quebecers.

Businesses and non-profits

Health Work
Housing

CRIMES, TICKETS AND FINES

Couples and families
Estates and wills

Consumers

HUMAN RIGHTS

The legal system

 educaloi.qc.ca

 facebook.com/educaloi

 @educaloi

PARTNER-MEMBERS

 Barreau
du Québec

 Chambre
des notaires

 SOQUIJ

Éducaloï also receives support from:

 Department of Justice
Canada

 Justice
Québec

Social Media

OUR LEGAL RESPONSIBILITIES

ēducaloï

Setting
the Scene

Expressing ourselves online
can be rewarding.

But some online behaviour
can have legal consequences,
especially when it hurts
other people's rights.

This pamphlet/info sheet provides general information about the law in Quebec.

You can print or distribute it as is, but you can't modify or sell it.

© Property of Éducaloï - October 2026 Version

Make sure you have the most recent version:
educaloi.qc.ca/en/publications

Posting Pictures of People

Before you post a recognizable picture or video of people online, think again. You usually need their permission.

There are some exceptions to this rule. For example, if you take a picture of a crowd at a public event, like a hockey game, you don't need the permission of every person.

You also usually need permission to share private information about other people. This includes information about their personal life and health.

People can ask the websites involved to remove posts. Companies have different policies on this.

If the information or image causes the person harm, a judge can force you to take down the post and even pay compensation.

Comments About People and Insults

If you post images or comments about people that damage their reputation or dignity, they can sue you to make up for harm caused.

A harmful post might be a nasty insult, a hateful image or a suggestion about someone that isn't true.

Harassment and Threats

Just like in real life, people can be sued or charged with a crime for harassing or threatening people online.

Parents must intervene when their child is cyberbullying others or being cyberbullied. Parents can be held legally responsible for harm their child causes.

If someone repeatedly posts comments on your social media page that make you feel unsafe, you can call the police. They could be charged with criminal harassment.

A public post that promotes hate against a group of people could also be hate speech, which is a crime in Canada.

A single threat made through a tweet or post could also be a crime, even if the person doesn't plan on carrying out the threat.

Complaining About Businesses

Businesses have a right to reputation.

Some businesses have brought people to court in Quebec for posting negative or untrue comments about them on Facebook.

Courts try to find a balance between free speech rights and the right to reputation. A court might ask if the comments were

- based on true facts,
- made with good intentions (not just to hurt someone),
- reasonable and fairly presented, or
- in the public interest to share.

Quebec law also has protections against abusive lawsuits.

Posting “Intimate” or Sexual Images

Sharing intimate images of people without their permission is a crime. For example, it is illegal to post intimate photos of a former partner on social media or send them to a friend.

An intimate image is a private photo or video showing parts of the body, such as breasts or genitals, or depicting an explicit sexual act. It can also be a “deepfake”. A deepfake is an image created or altered using artificial intelligence.

People who share intimate images could face up to 14 years in prison.

People who post or repost intimate images of a person under 18 can be charged with distributing child pornography. The official legal term is “child sexual abuse and exploitation material”.

